Stanley Halls

This is what Stanley Halls theatre looks like from the outside. The arrow is pointing towards the check-in entrance for 'Messy'.

At this front entrance you will meet a friendly member of staff who will check your tickets. They will also take down a few of your details for Covid track and trace.

If you are not a wheelchair user you will go through the check-in entrance door, down a path to the decking, then down the stairs to the courtyard, where the performance is taking place.

Stanley Halls

This is the space where we will be performing Messy. We will be making sure that the way our audience is set up follows current Covid guidelines. The chairs will be in groups for each household to sit together on and for wheelchairs to join.

The accessible toilet is through the check-in entrance, down the path and in the Cafe. The door to the Cafe is shown in the picture to the right. Wheelchair users and non wheelchair users should use the same route that they took to get to their seats from the check-in entrance, to get to the toilet.

If you or anyone in your party are a wheelchair user, a member of staff will accompany you around the side of the building (down Cumberlow Avenue), and through the gate to the courtyard where the performance will take place.

The 'Messy' Set

The 'Messy' set is made up of lots of socks hung between four poles. This set stays the same throughout the show, and the characters use props such as tables and puppets to show different settings in the story.

The story is set in Daisy's bedroom, her school classroom and her school playground. Within the story the characters imagine going to different places such as the Moon, the jungle, and under the sea.
